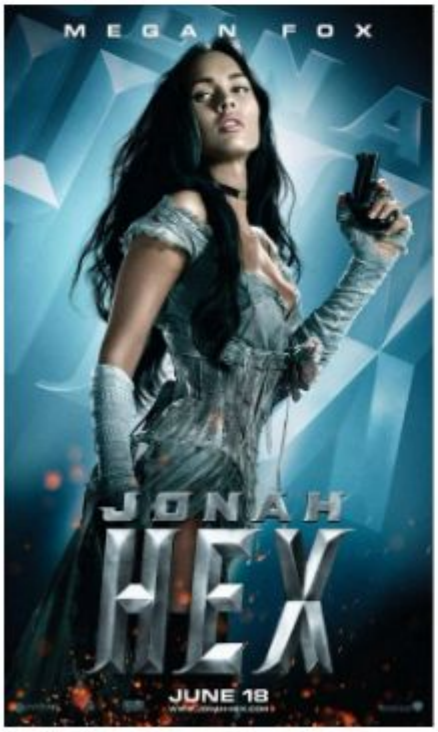
JONAH HEX

"Jonah Hex" is a 2010 American supernatural Western film based on the DC Comics character of the same name.



The film centers on Jonah Hex (played by Josh Brolin), a disfigured bounty hunter with a supernatural ability to communicate with the dead.

JONAH HEX

His backstory reveals that during the Civil War, he refused an order from his Confederate commanding officer, Quentin Turnbull (John Malkovich), to burn down a hospital.

This led to a confrontation where Hex was forced to kill Turnbull's son.

JONAH HEX

In retaliation, Turnbull murdered Hex's family and branded his face, leaving him for dead.

Hex was miraculously saved by Native Americans, who also bestowed upon him his unique ability.

JONAH HEX

Years later, Turnbull, who was presumed dead, resurfaces with a plan to unleash a powerful experimental weapon (allegedly invented by Eli Whitney) to attack the United States on the Fourth of July.

President Ulysses S. Grant enlists Hex to track down and stop Turnbull, offering him a full pardon in exchange.

JONAH HEX

Hex, driven by a desire for revenge, accepts the mission.

He is aided by Lila (Megan Fox), a prostitute who has a connection with him. The film follows Hex's pursuit of Turnbull, encountering various eccentric characters and engaging in violent confrontations, ultimately leading to a final showdown to prevent Turnbull's catastrophic plan.
